Dark Web

About

Dark Web is an internet-based digital music release combining composed music and interactive visuals.

As a term, Dark Web is used to describe secret and hidden parts of the internet and provides a framework for encrypted communication between users who wish not to be monitored by governments or commercial powers.

In this music release, the user enters a digital environment where a morphed echo of the outside world has been processed to fit a network of ones and zeros, some elements fully mutated, others not.

At the same time, the environment has a life of its own and continues its existence with or without us paying attention, reminding that the internet has become larger than life.

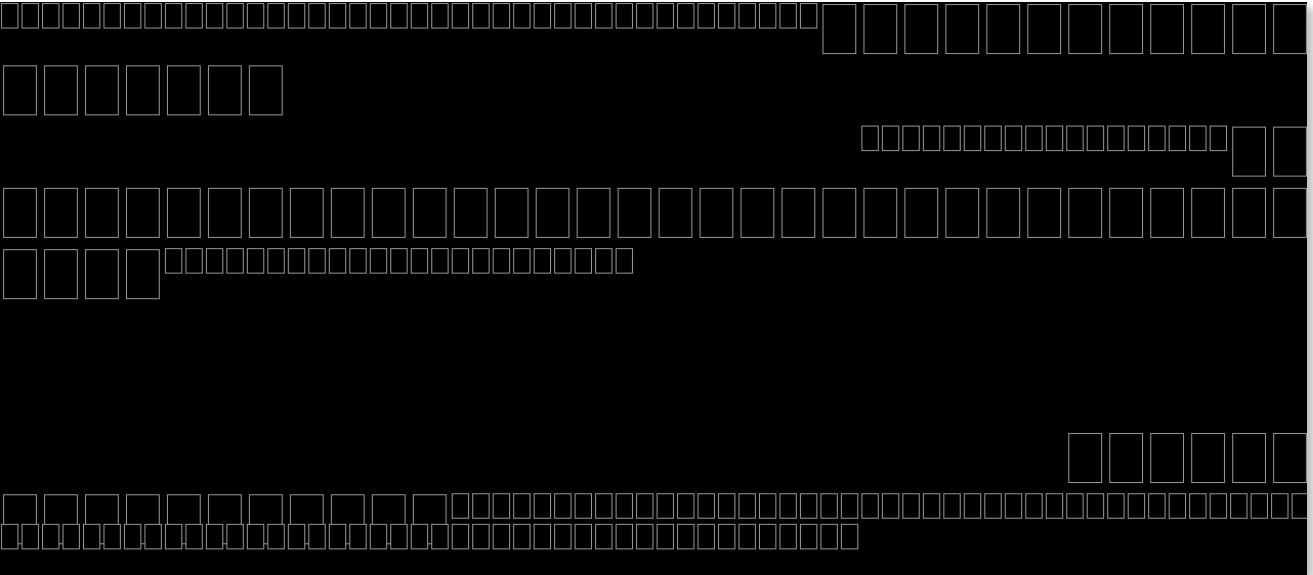

Compositionally, Dark Web seeks to explore a core musical parameter, “time”, with the ambition to expand it without relying on automatism or generative systems.

Instead, the music explores micro-polyphonic looping and canons on both a micro and a macro level.

Additionally, the website allows for the user to create their own visual artwork, making them an active part in the realisation of Dark Web.

Bio

Morten Poulsen is a composer, sound artist and drummer. Drawing on his background in improvisational music, he has pursued his desire to explore sounds and our relation to them, through composition, performance art, sound design and installation.
